NEXT ISSUE: DON'T MISS "THE MONSTER FROM A MILLION, BILLION, TRILLION, SQUILLION FATHOMS!" IT'S CRAZY, MAN!

THE BOOKWORM TURNS

I never left the old family mansion very much. I didn't care for the noise of the city . . . the traffic jams . . . billions of people! Not for this boy! The only noise I could stand was the chirping of the sparrows out in the back yard . . . jam spread across my bread and butter . . . and the billions of books in my room in the old house. Well, maybe not billions, but a few thousand anyway. The pater . . . he's my old man . . . called me a bookworm. I looked it up in the dictionary when he first called me that . . . I wanted to be sure it wasn't insulting, if you know what I mean.

When I looked up the definition of the word bookworm, I was a little sore when I read the first meaning . . . "any of various insect larvae which feed on the binding and paste of books". It was a dirty lie, I shouted out loud. I was alone in my room at the time, so the pater didn't hear me. Me, a grubby insect feeding on paste? Not on your life! Ah, there was more to the definition . . . "one usually devoted to reading or studying books". Well, that was more like it! If that's what my pater meant when he called me a bookworm, I'd go along with him on that. Sure, there was nothing I enjoyed better than reading! I had read every book in the old family collection, and had a standing order with the book store in the city to send me any new books they got in. Man, I could burrow through a volume like nobody's business . . . and if that meant being a bookworm, I was one all right!

For years no one bothered me. But I suppose all good things must come to an end, because one day it happened! I had always thought I was the only offspring of my pater and my mater . . . that's my mother. I never had a brother or sister to chum around with. So what happens? All of a sudden, I find myself with a twin brother on my hands . . . a twin brother yet! It wasn't bad enough that there was one of me . . . there had to be a carbon copy too! Well, not exactly a duplicate of myself, because, although he looked like me, his personality was completely different from mine. It didn't take me long to notice it either. But I'm getting a little ahead of my story.

As I said, I suddenly discovered that I had a twin brother. He came in to see me one night . . . it was around midnight, I think. I was reading late as usual. It was a book on psychology, I think. Anyway, this creep appeared in the room before me. I had not even heard him enter. He just seemed to materialize out of the shadows of the room. Funny . . . although I was somewhat surprised to find I had a twin brother, I didn't even think of questioning it. So it was kept from me all these years, that's all! Maybe he was away somewhere since we were kids, and I had forgotten about it. Yeah, that must have been it! So now he was back home again, and I had to be nice to him. But I soon saw it wasn't going to be easy! The guy acted strange. He called me a bookworm, which didn't bother me. My pater must have told him all about my habits of reading. But strange? The guy had a perpetual sneer that never left his lips. I didn't like that wild look in his black eyes either!

After hurling a few more choice epithets at me, such as recluse, hermit and nonentity, he left the room as silently as he had entered it. And that was only the first of several nightly visits. I'd be reading and not aware of anything around me . . . just the words in the book. All of a sudden he'd be standing there. After hurling the same words at me, beginning with "bookworm" and ending with "nonentity", he'd leave. Oh, he was in a rut, that one!

So what happens? So all of a sudden he stops coming to see me! It had gotten so I sorta expected to hear his cheery voice every night. So he double-crosses me and doesn't show up! I couldn't help from wondering why. But I got my answer long after midnight that very first night when he didn't show up as usual. I happened to look out into the back yard.

...CONTINUED

The full moon provided illumination. And there was my twin brother leaving the house by the back door and sneaking off into the night! Ah ha! The old boy has something on his mind, if any! I couldn't control my curiosity, so I sneaked down the back stairs, out into the yard and followed the figure of my twin brother not too far in front of me. His steps led directly to the cemetery!

Now I'm one guy who can take graveyards or leave them . . . and I usually leave them as fast as my legs can carry me. Especially when it's after midnight! But this was too good to miss. I just had to see what was going to happen. Then I noticed that my brother had a spade in his hand. Yep, it figured! Cemetery . . . graves . . . a spade! The guy was a ghoul! And sure enough, he started to dig the earth up over a fresh grave. When he had uncovered that corpse, he started on another grave . . . and then another! So what was he going to do with the bodies? I recalled all those books I had read about mad scientists. Dr. Frankenstein and all the others. Well, I had seen enough. I made my way back to the house and got to my room without anyone seeing me. I flopped on the bed and closed my eyes. I was very tired, and I dozed off.

I guess it was the awful smell that woke me up! Surely the musty old volumes on my book shelves didn't smell that bad . . . not yet, anyway. And then I realized what it was. The full moon shone in my window and in its rays I saw all those nasty corpses piled up on the long table! So my twin brother had carried them into my room while I slept and left them on the table. He intended to use my room to create his monster! Now this was going a little too far! Wait till he showed up again . . . I'd fix his wagon!

Then I heard the agitated footsteps on the stairs, coming up to my room. If it was my twin brother, he was not alone. Too many feet for one person. And then, suddenly, I realized what was going to happen. My brother had gotten cold feet and decided to abandon his project. But he wasn't able to dispose of the corpses. So what was the next best thing to do? Why, implicate me, of course! Sure, he had sounded the alarm and was bringing witnesses to my room to show them, and accuse me of grave-robbing!

Well, I was ready for them! My twin brother was the first one to open the door and stand in the doorway. Oh how I hated his guts! He had that same sneer on his face. I would have to destroy him! As my pater and the family doctor rushed into the room, I reached for my brother's throat. While I pressed my fingers into his neck, I kept shouting my accusation against him so that the others would understand.

"Caught him robbing graves . . . was going to create a monster! My twin brother did it! He's evil, I tell you!"

Funny . . . although I kept putting pressure on his throat, I was beginning to feel dizzy. Then I collapsed to the floor. Just before I passed out, I could hear the family doctor muttering some gibberish to my pater about "delusions . . . alter ego . . . split personality".

And my pater was shaking his head too and I heard him say, "You're probably right . . . he never had a twin brother!"

Poor pater! Guess he was getting so old, he couldn't remember about my twin brother. Well, that's about the end of my story. Kinda interesting, eh? Oh yeah, I guess I should tell you . . . I'm not staying in that room in the old house any more . . . the room with all the books. They put me in a small room with padded walls. Guess they know I don't like to hear outside noises much. The food isn't bad, but I miss the jam spread on my bread and butter. I miss the books most of all, I guess. But they won't let me have any in this place. The only time they brought me a book, I tried to eat through the binding and paste! Well, why shouldn't I? I am a bookworm, ain't I?"
